BIG ROAD BUILDING
PROGRAM AHEAD
FOR UNITED STATES

000'081 '3004 02 01 21 1922' 20000
Miles Improved Highway To Be Built By Federal Aid.

AGGREGATE COST TO GOVERN-MENT NEAR THREE BILLION

Fifteen to twenty years of building good roads lie ahead of the United States. Under the program which the country has adopted there will be built, during that time, 180,000 miles of improved highways and which will constitute the Federal aid highway system with equal or greater mileage of State and local roads. When the great job is done, the transportation facilities of the country will far exceed those of any other nation, past or present, in the world. The highways of the ancient Romans, whose fame has come down through the centuries, will pale by comparison.

Details of this vast road-building program are to be placed before the Highway Education Board at its conference in Washington October 26 to 28, inclusive, by State Highway Engineers and officials of the Bureau of Public Roads, United States Department of Agriculture, to whom has been entrusted the work of planning and supervising the construction of Federal-aid highways. The plan will be presented to enable the Board to proceed authoritatively with its work of devising aids for schools and colleges to which road-builders of the country are turning for competent highway engineers.

Aggregate Cost 3 Billion.

Officials of the bureau place the aggregate cost of the Federal-aid program alone at about $3,000,000,000, spread over the twenty-year period. They base this estimate on an average cost of $17,000 per mile. The average cost, in turn, takes into consideration all classes of improved roadways from the cheapest to the most expensive types. Approximately one third of the proposed system, or 60,000 miles of improved highways, already are either built or building.

The program is a new one. Up to comparatively recent years, road-building in the United States had been conducted without special regard to a national system. Highways had been constructed where needed without considering whether they would link up in the most effective manner with the whole network of roads to be spread over the nation. Engineers had sought more to meet immediate and local demands than the broader requirements of the State and nation.

Roads Part of Unit.

The present Federal-aid road building program, officials of the bureau state, will contemplate the construction of only such roads as fit into the national program and contribute to the national system. At the same time the roads will be so selected as to serve the most important local requirements. With marked modifications, the system adopted in building the railways of the country will be borne in mind in the construction of the country's new highways. There will be main lines of highway communication between centers and thousands of miles of feeder roads, reaching back into the more sparsely settled regions and into the rich agricultural sections, to tap areas whose population and products will flow over the new system.

New roads will be planned and built—thousands of miles of them—where they will fit in most advantageously with the entire program. The bureau is continuing its research work into most efficient methods of road building, including the character and wearing power of materials, resisting qualities of varying subsoils, etc., and has amassed a considerable store of valuable information all of which will be available for the engineer of tomorrow, whom the board is seeking to have educated in practical and modern methods.

Bandit Begg For Brain Operation;
Roy Gardner Is Asking a Chance

LEAVENWORTH, Kas., Oct. 13.—

Does Uncle Sam keep his word with a mail train bandit?

Roy Gardner, mail bandit and slipperiest prisoner Federal officers have tried to make "stay put," wants to know. It may mean that he will be transformed from the most closely watched inmate of the Federal penitentiary here into a model prisoner.

After the most picturesque career of banditry and thrilling escapes the country has known for decades, Gardner last fall was sentenced to serve 25 years at the Leavenworth prison. This was after McNeill's Island Federal prison had been unable to confine him.

"Judge, I will go and will give my word not to escape this time if you will promise that I be permitted to undergo an operation to make my brain function right," pledged Gardner when a Federal judge at Phoenix sentenced him.

No Operation Yet.

Gardner says the judge agreed. Gardner came here, went to work in the tailor shop and has been a model prisoner.

So far, there has been no operation. Judge William Sawtelle, who sentenced Gardner, said he made no such promise. Harry M. Daugherty, attorney general, refuses to grant permission for the operation. But Gardner and his wife insist the promise was made, and they continue the fight to have surgeons seek to stifle his criminal impulses.

Before attorney General Daugherty's statements of reputable surgeons that they can cut into Gardner's skull and raise any portion that may be pressing upon his brain. These are supplemented by statements of Gardner's friends that they believe such an operation would remove crime actions. Daugherty also has the report of the Leavenworth prison physician that Gardner is not different from other prisoners. An operation, the physician contends, would not change Gardner's physical or mental condition.

Supporting the physician is a report from Heber H. Votaw, brother-in-law of President Harding, and superintendent of Federal prisons. Votaw abides by the decision of the prison physician.

Unless Daugherty himself issues the order, the operation will not be performed.

Wife Still Hopeful.

But Dolly Gardner, the bandit's pretty wife, has not given up. When gets the necessary funds she will go from her home at Napa, Cal., to Washington to press her plea. Both she and Gardner says the money is ready to finance the operation. Neither will divulge its source, however.

Recently $250 was sent to the prison warden in an anonymous letter stating it was to finance the operation.

"I have a moral right to be normal and thus be able to live straight, even though I do have to remain in prison," declares Gardner. "I believe that without part of my skull pressing on a certain part of my brain, I would not be swept by criminal impulses."

"A blow on the head as I fell from a horse caused the trouble. That was when I was a boy in Missouri. As year went by "chasing" from a model youth in Chillicothe, Mo., to a law-breaker.

"THE UNANSWERABLE QUESTION IS EVANGELIST'S SUBJECT"

Before a large congregation that gave earnest attention, Evangelist W. J. Clarke spoke at the Christian Church last night on the text, Hebrews 2:3, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" He said that through this salvation we escape from a life out of harmony with its environment; from the making of a failure in this life; and from the pain of hell, which he said was not a place of literal fire or of literal outer darkness but is described under these figures of speech to impress on us the reality of the torment of a soul forever face to face with its sin, that has lost the ability to repent and that must forever continue in an environment for which it was not made. The speaker pointed out that the great and condemning sin was not murder, theft, lying or any other sin; but it was condemned by neglecting to receive Jesus Christ as a personal Savior. The subject for tonight is "Many Excuses."

NEW YORK The Many Wonders of The Great Metropolis

By W. H. Porterfield

New Yorkers per capita are probably just as moral as the folks of Sioux City, Ia.

Broadly speaking, their reactions to so-called pleasure may be cruder than your Gothamite with six million near neighbors who neither know him personally nor care to do so, is bound to have a very different sense of personal responsibility for conduct from the postmaster of Tama City, whom everybody knows personally and watches. Get me?

But the strain on the Tama postmaster. I speak metaphorically, may become too great. Hence a trip to New York, and hence the bright lights.

New York has the finest art museum in the western world in Central Park, a museum of art in many respects rivaling the best of those of the old world, though lacking, of course, in quantity of originals.

Weeks might be spent most profitably, in the wonderful galleries of the Metropolitan, viewing the Raphaels, Frauz Halls, Rembrandts, Rubens, Van Dycks, Gainsboroughs and all the rest of the old masters and the best representatives of the modern in painting, the splendid reproductions of ancient sculpture, the architecture of the ancient and medieval world, the Pompeian room, the ancient Egyptian, Chaldean and all the rest. I know of no more profitable way to spend a day than by visiting the Metropolitan and it costs but two bus fares.

You can join the Metropolitan Art Museum patrons, too, if you wish and become that very desirable person, a patron of art. To be a benefactor costs $50,000 or you can range down to sum-able membership on payment of $10 the year.

Then there is the no less wonderful Museum of Natural History, also in Central Park, and doubtless the finest in existence, containing a bewildering collection of the world's best in the taxidermists' art, in reproductions of group races, in anthropology and prehistoric studies of various kinds.

This also is free, as is also the great Public Library at Forty second St containing among a thousand other things, the finest collection of book-bindings in America and the third finest in the world. A day of pure delight can be spent here at any time.

Then the Bronx Zoo, incomparably the finest collection of wild animals life ever gathered together since Noah's well-known argosy. Growlups are fond of saying they go to the zoo to take the children. I don't. I go to when I can steal the time because I enjoy every minute of it.

Perhaps, however, you enjoy the church architecture and decoration if so I recommend the unfinished Cathedral of St. John the Divine (Episcopal) at Morningside Park, 118th street, incomparably the most beautiful and costly of anything this side of the Atlantic, and a visit to St. Patrick's on Fifth avenue at 50th street, is well worth the few minutes pause en route from down town.

But it is in commercial architecture of course, that New York is supreme in the world and history.

There are the 26 bridges spanning East and Harlem rivers, ranging from the beautiful old stone Kings and Washington bridges of a century ago, in Harlem, to the tremendous cantilever structure known as Queensboro bridge at East 50th street one and one-half miles long, 135 feet high in the clear, with its island towers 324 feet high, all built at a cost of $20,000,000 in 1901-09 and worth to replace at present costs, over $40,000,000.

There's a structure to fire your thought. What would the old Romans, those masters of applied science and master bridge builders of the ancient world, have thought of the Queensboro or the no less beautiful Brooklyn bridge or Hellgate bridge, the longest steel arch bridge in the world? You tell.

Then turning to the office buildings, view the incredible pile known as the Municipal buildings, the lofty Singer, the king of them all, the 792-foot Woolworth Cathedral of Commerce, and the even more startling Warlicker building up town, and a thousand others which in any other setting would be wonderful enough.

For towers, the famous Madison Square Garden has long since been eclipsed by the Great Metropolitan Insurance tower, one of the most impressive sights in New York by day or by night, while the Equitable building now being erected at Broadway and Nassau, will be the largest office building in the world.

Or suppose you are interested in interior decorations? Visit the New Canard building at the foot of Broadway, containing what are said to be the finest mural paintings in any commercial building in this country.

These are but a few of the delights of New York, which the visitor can see and remember with honest pleasure. They make the self-denial required for the journey well worth while.

TEXAS TO CHOOSE WOMAN SENATOR

Dallas, Tex., Oct. 13.—Mrs. Edith E. Wilmans of Dallas is picked to be the first woman elected to a law-making body in Texas. She received the Democratic nomination in a spirited primary, defeating John E. Davis, who for years has been one of the leading members of the legislature. The nomination is said to insure election.

Mrs. Wilmans has been an attorney for several years. She is married and is the mother of three girls.

Mrs. Williams, in her campaign, promised, if elected, to propose legislation providing for a court of domestic relations, a eugenics bill and the amendment of the compulsory school law, in order to assure that all children will have an opportunity at least to get a rudimentary education.

"I expect to devote all of my energies to legislation that will make for the betterment of the schools and the homes," she says.

Fifth Article: Czechoslovakia

In many respects, Czechoslovakia seems to be the most prosperous country in Europe. There was more building going on in Prague than in any other city twice its size. Capital is seeking employment. Some two or three large modern hotels are in process of projection; the industrial situation is good; the crops seem to be above the average; the people are contented with the new order, and a long period of tranquillity is in prospect.

The Bohemian language is being taught and the Slovaks, Moravians and Czecho-Slovaks are impressed with the progressive tendencies of the government. The Masaryk, the venerable president, is beloved by his countrymen and his very able aide, Minister Benes, is regarded as a real asset to the country. Masaryk is over 70 years old. He is an enthusiastic horseman and his interest in the development of the new country is so well sustained that he keeps abreast of the younger group of statesmen.

The feeling is general that when Masaryk retires, Benes will succeed him as president.

Benes is only 33 years old. His life reads like a romance. The son of a peasant family, his imagination was deeply stirred by the intellectual group which revolved almost a century ago that even in the face of imposed obstacles the Bohemian traditions would be kept alive. As he put it, the entire system, governmental, industrial, educational and religious, was slowly undergoing a development based upon the objective of creating a German style.

The army officers, the bankers, the entire official force and the church, for the most part operated together. The intellectual groups preached the gospel of a sustained spiritual resource. The peasants particularly were told that they must not give up hope.

Benes' Rise Due to His Own Efforts

Benes' career was resolved upon as he was in his teens. At the age of 12 he went to Paris, working in a factory, attending night school, contributing articles to those newspapers which remained true to the old Bohemian idealism, and when he was 21 received his degree at the university. He spent a year in London, studying the English system of government and the same length of time in Berlin and St. Petersburg. Returning to his native country, he associated himself with Masaryk in the University of Prague. He has remained a faithful and useful subordinate ever since.

We lunched together on his desk in the old castle. He is a man not over five feet eight in height, weight about 150 pounds, keeps himself physically fit with tennis and horseback riding, and in his work combines the qualities of imagination and efficient administration. He has the most comprehensive grasp of the affairs of his country, and realizes not only the opportunities that lie ahead for Czechoslovakia, but the obstacles as well. He summed up the situation in these words: "We are getting along pretty well, but we have a lot to do."

(Recognizing that the solution to the land problem was of vast importance, the government courageously took hold of it. One-third of the land was owned by landlords who parceled out the acreage in small tracts to tenants. When one looks across the narrow strip that is allotted to a single family, because men, women and children, work in the fields together, he realizes how intensive the effort must be to scrape a bare living out of the soil. The landlord, of course, has profited by the close cultivation of every acre. The land kings have lived in their stone castles, the lords of all they surveyed, and controlled by the idea that if the peasants were given an opportunity to live, the system was equitable all around.

Land Monopolies Broken For People

Under the existing arrangement no one can own more than 250 hectares or 625 acres. The administration of this law is proceeding slowly and constructively. In splitting up the landed estates, the government decrees the price. There is nothing arbitrary about it because the right to appeal is allowed. In some dispositions recently made of land average fertility, prices ran as low as $30 an acre. In some instances tracts have been divided with prices running as high as $150 an acre.

One million, six hundred thousand acres were owned by the Hapsburgs, and came to the government. These will be turned over to the tillers of the soil. The payments run over a period of 15 years. All old rights are retained by the government. The

GOV. COX SAYS:

Everyone of the required age is obliged to vote. Whoever, without reasonable ground, fails to take part in an election is liable to a fine of from 20 to 500 crowns or to a term of imprisonment.

Local autonomous government is created in counties and districts, thus giving to racial minorities and the communities themselves, control over provincial matters.

Standard Oil Company has recently made contracts with the government covering extensive fields. The result of the new land policy will mean a more widely diffused prosperity in the agricultural sections.

Some very interesting things are found in the new constitution of the country. In fact, here is the very expression of advanced ideals. A new nation dominated by progressive principles has translated its spirit into a charter of government. For the very reason, great interest centers in the new endeavor.

Every one of the required age is required to vote. Exception is made in favor of persons seventy years of age or over, and those who are ill. Whoever, without reasonable ground, fails to take part in an election is liable to a fine of from 20 to 2000 crowns or to a term of imprisonment from 24 hours to one month. The various political parties present the lists of candidates. Fourteen days before the election there is published in the official journals of the local constituency the lists that are found valid and such information as will be of interest to the electorate.

The ballots are placed in the hands of the voters at least three days before the election. The cost of printing the ballots is assumed by the government and the political parties. Elections took place on Sundays. The members of the Chamber of Deputies must be at least 30 years of age, and 20 voters can participate in the election of these members who is not 31. The members of the Senate shall be 45, and the voters participating in the election of this branch must be 26. Men and women are equally eligible to vote and hold office.

Constitutional questions are decided by the constitutional court, appointments to which are made by the president of the republic, the Chamber of Deputies, the Senate, the Diet of Roussina. Four members each are taken from the ranks of the Supreme Court of Justice and the Supreme Administrative Court. The members of the Constitutional Court serve for a term of ten years.

The question whether a particular law is in conflict with the constitution cannot be considered by the Constitutional Court except on the motion of the Supreme Court of Justice or the Supreme Administrative Court, the Electoral Court, the Chamber of Deputies the Senate or the Diet of Roussina. Resolution to carry such a motion must be based upon a majority of the above mentioned bodies in each case, within three years at least of the date on which the law was promulgated.

Parliament Names President
The president of the republic convokes, prorogues, terminates and dissolves parliament, but he is compelled to assemble parliament at least two times a year to regular session. Sessions must be held so on the request of a qualified majority of either of the branches. The president is not allowed to exercise the right to dissolve parliament during the last six months of his term of office.

The president is chosen by the two chambers of parliament for a term of seven years, and must be at least 35 years of age. His election is valid only if half of the members of both chambers are present, and if a majority of three-fifths of those present shall be obtained. If two ballots produce no result, a third shall be cast to decide between the two leading candidates. If there is then a tie, the decision is made by lot. No one shall be elected president more than twice in succession, but after a period of seven years he may be reelected. The constitution specifies that these provisions shall not apply to the first president of the republic.

Local autonomous government is created in counties and districts, thus giving to racial minorities and the communities themselves, control over provincial matters. The opening paragraph of the constitutional charter, says:

"The people are the sole source of all state power in the Czechoslovakia republic. This constitutional charter determines through what organs the sovereign people shall express their will in laws, provides for the execution of these laws and guarantees to the people their rights and liberties. Such limitations are imposed upon these organs of government as shall preserve to the people all the rights guaranteed by this charter. The Czechoslovakia state shall be a democratic republic."

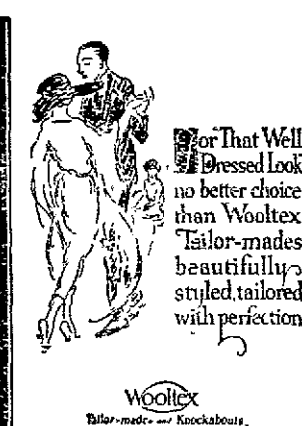

There are 300 members of the Chamber of Deputies the Senate consists of 150 members. Both are elected for a six year term. Only with consent of the two branches of parliament, shall members become liable to civil or criminal prosecution.

The ministers of the government have the right to participate at any time in the meetings of either chamber or of the committee. Permission must be granted to speak whenever they demand to be heard. Either chamber or a committee can summon a minister before it; otherwise he may be represented by an officer of his department. Any law which involves the expenditure of money must be accompanied by an estimate of the amount involved and a plan for the defraying of the cost.

Speed Provided For New Laws

The Senate shall act on a bill passed by the Chamber of Deputies within six weeks, and on the budget and army bills within one month. The chamber of deputies shall act on any bill passed by the Senate within three months. A measure passed by the Chamber of Deputies shall become a law despite an adverse decision of the Senate of the chamber declares by a majority of 50 per cent of all its members that it adheres to its first decision. Should the senate reject a draft bill passed by the chamber of deputies by a majority of all its members the bill becomes a law provided that the chamber re-enacts its decision by a three-fifths majority of all its members. Proposals of the Senate shall be referred to the chamber of deputies. If the chamber then rejects the bill for the second time by a majority of 50 per cent of all its members the bill so rejected may not be presented to either chamber until after the lapse of one year. If parliament refuses to claim a referendum, but only in the event that the government action is unanimous.

HUMOR'S SOBER SIDE

By JOSEPHINE VAN DE GRIFT

Back in 1914, there was, as things go, a world series. Stories on the world series were written by various well known ball players and published in the newspapers. Then somebody began kicking up a little trouble. "Those stories aren't written by ball players at all," he said, "somebody else writes them and then the ball player signs his name."

A young writer who was working on the Chicago Tribune got an idea

It mightn't go bad. He reflected, if I'd write a world series while they were up.

Which was the way that Ring Lardner became a humorist.

Lardner endeavored to do about it on the fourth day of the world series recently completed. The place was that, with it immediately beneath the grand stand where newspaper men could write to tell how it all might have been avoided and so on, principally to eat.

Lardner, when commenced, it not said at least suggests a deeply introspective turn of mind sat down upon the chair which three waiters protected him.

"There's really nothing," he began. "Some chicken salad, say."

Lardner waved the man away gently. "There's nothing to it you see. I'm just staid around and listen to the ball players talk."

The waiter hopped from one foot to the other. "Some cold Virginia baked him, sir, or some sliced chicken? A little celery now?"

Lardner gazed at one of the men kindly.

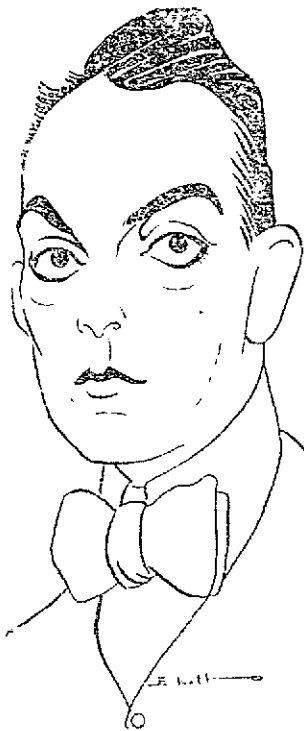

"No thank you," he said. "I've just had breakfast." The waiter went away dubiously.

"You see you just staid around and listen to the ball players talk. That's the way I got to calling it the world series. Then you pick up a few other expressions like a—"

Another waiter thrust in. "A biscuit Tortoni, sir?"

Lardner expressed interest. "A what?"

"A biscuit Tortoni, sir."

VELVET FOR FALL EVENING GOWNS

beautiful models are shown with no trimming at all beyond a series of side drapes or a deep Bertha collar of metal lace.

Evening gowns continue to be sleeveless and are much longer. Otherwise there is little change in their lines.

Backless gowns have been predicted, but as yet they are nowhere in evidence.

By all odds the most popular material for evening gowns this winter will be velvet.

It may be embroidered or beaded, if one wishes, but many extremely

"Oh," he murmured, "I thought you said a whisky Tortoni. You just pick up some expressions," he continued like a 12 wit, or "this monking around" or why the dickens or—"

A joyful speech came from somewhere on the side lines. "Oh, it's Mister Lardner, oo-hoo, hello, Mr. Lardner."

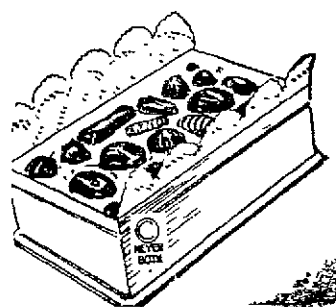

Lardner arose and tipped his hat punctiliously. Then he sat down again. "You pick up a few expressions like that, and then maybe you see a better where especially is written a specially and 'corpse' is spelled 'corpse' and pretty soon, if you hear it all in mind, the things done for you. Nothing hard, you know just—"

"Batteries for today will be—"

Lardner struggled to his feet. "My most quoted line? Well, I suppose it's 'You know Me, Al,' but it doesn't mean a thing, you know, it doesn't."
